Why Isn't It Online?

Written by Dick Eastman, Published September 14, 2013

NOTE: This article contains personal opinions.

I recently read about a new book that documents all the readable tombstones in a cemetery and provides a map of that cemetery. The single copy of this handmade book is available at a public library near the cemetery that was documented. That effort results in a valuable resource for anyone researching ancestry in the area IF THEY CAN TRAVEL TO VIEW THE BOOK. For some descendants, that may require travel of thousands of miles.

Of course, thinking about the publication of a single book immediately begs the question, "What about those of us who are unable to travel to a specific library that might be thousands of miles away?" I will suggest it is time to change everyone's thinking about publishing.

The "old mentality" always has been to publish a book in order to preserve information and to make that information available to everyone. Of course, this also implies that the information really is available only to everyone who is able to travel to the location of the book or is able to purchase a copy of the book.

In reality, that's not a very good solution.

Economic factors often prevent people from finding the information they seek. Many of us cannot travel to a library that is thousands of miles away. Even the purchase of a copy is difficult. You first have to find if a copy is available for sale. Often, the answer is "no." Next, if you are lucky enough to find copies for sale, you then have to pay for the book plus whatever shipping charges are required. For many of us, it isn't practical to pay $25 or $50 or more for every book that we would like to read, especially if we only need a paragraph or two. Even worse, many of us cannot pay hundreds or possibly thousands of dollars in travel expenses to visit various local libraries and repositories to view books and records of interest.

In this day and age, there is a better solution. That solution involves technology.

I will suggest that all books of interest to genealogists, historians, and others with an interest in the books' contents should be published electronically and copies should be placed online. There are thousands of web sites that will gladly host the books.

These books generally are labors of love where the authors typically have no expectations of generating large profits. In a few cases, the books will be available free of charge. However, I would think it appropriate to pay the author a modest fee to help reimburse expenses and to encourage further production of future

President's Message

Dear Friends,

It's December 31st, and in just a few hours, we will all be welcoming in the New Year. It hardly seems possible, but it is here. Whether you watch New York's Time Square ball drop at midnight surrounded by friends and family, curled up with a good book, or fast asleep in bed, my best wishes go out to you for 2014. May the year be good to you and may you have good results in all your family history pursuits.

I hope that one of those pursuits will include the Marshfield Area Genealogy Group. It is your group after all; and just as we welcome the New Year, MAGG welcomes your input as to what you would like to see on the website, in the newsletter, and for our upcoming programs. Any suggestions as to what you would like to see added just let us know.

Another family history pursuit, you might consider are the free monthly webinars provided by the Wisconsin Genealogical Society. Held on the third Tuesday of each month at 7 p.m. you can hear great speakers and learn more about how to do your genealogy better! Check out their upcoming schedule on their website <http://www.wsgs.org/>.

I look forward to welcoming you to the upcoming 2014 activities of the Marshfield Area Genealogy Group.

Best wishes for the New Year,

books of valuable records. These electronic books could either be placed on a public site with free access or be published on any of dozens of web sites that charge a small fee for access, such as Lulu.com. Books can be published as PDF files or as HTML or even as DOC or RTF files, as the author desires. Once the book is written, publishing online requires only a few additional minutes.

Of course, having the book visible to Google and other search engines greatly increases the chances of someone being able to find valued information whenever they wish.

A book of cemetery records is a perfect example. I'd gladly pay $3 or $4 to access an electronic copy of a book online when I want to obtain a paragraph or two of information. However, I probably will be reluctant to pay $20 or more for a printed copy of the same book. After all, I will only use the book for a few minutes.

My guess is that someone who places a book of cemetery records online on Lulu.com and charges $3 for access will probably make a lot more money than someone who charges $20 for a printed copy of the same book. Many people will pay $3 while they won't pay $20. Which produces more profit: selling 50 copies at $20 each or 5,000 copies at $3 each? The authors also will provide a better service to distant genealogists who seek the information. I also suspect the same will be true of tax lists, school records, and other transcriptions of interest to genealogists and historians.

Placing the book online provides immediate, low-cost access to many more people than those who will ever see the book that is sitting on a shelf at a local library. In addition, multiple backup copies can easily be stored in multiple locations, guaranteeing availability of the book for generations, regardless of fires, floods, hurricanes, tornadoes, or burst water pipes.

To be sure, there are some genealogists who do not use computers and therefore would seemingly be denied access. However, I will suggest that the number of non-computer-using genealogists is decreasing rapidly. Besides, without a computer, how would they ever learn about the printed book?

The solution is simple: even non-computer-using genealogists can ask a computer-using friend or relative to order the book for them. I doubt if there is any genealogist who neither uses a computer nor knows someone with a computer.

In today's world, "using a computer" is the same thing as saying "is connected online on the Internet."

Finally, I would suggest it is still appropriate to print one copy of the book and donate it to one library in the same way as before. That's the way it has always been done for non-computer-owning genealogists, and it seems trivial to continue the practice. Let's continue to publish in the old-fashioned method whenever possible by printing and placing a printed book on a shelf. All I am suggesting is an ADDITIONAL method of distributing the books for the ever-growing majority of genealogists who use computers.

Are you planning on compiling records? Is your local society involved in a project to transcribe important information and to make it available to others? If so, I hope that the information becomes available to everyone easily and at low cost. Luckily, this is easy to do in today's world. In fact, publishing online is easier than publishing on paper.

The next time a person or a society publishes a book of transcribed records, please ask them a question: "Why isn't it online?"

Let's move into the twenty-first century.

MyHeritage Signs Partnership Agreement with BillionGraves and Tributes.com, adds 5.5 Gravestone Records and 3.5 Million Obituaries

The following announcement was written by MyHeritage:

New tricks and treats for Halloween – search for your ancestors' gravestones and obituaries online at MyHeritage

MyHeritage teams up with BillionGraves and Tributes.com, adding millions of gravestone records and obituaries to its searchable database of historical records.

TEL AVIV, Israel & LEHI, Utah & BOSTON, MA & KAYSVILLE, Utah – October 30, 2013 - MyHeritage, the popular online family history network, has partnered with BillionGraves and Tributes.com, making new gravestone and obituary collections available to search on its service. With advanced technologies enabling the automatic discovery of these records, MyHeritage makes it easier for families everywhere to shed light on their family history.

MyHeritage has licensed 5.5 million records and images of gravestones from BillionGraves, bringing its total collection of gravestone records to more than 100 million. Packed with valuable information that helps tell the story of an ancestor's life, such as birth and death dates, family members and epitaphs written by loved ones, gravestones often provide an emotional turning-point in family history research. These records are available for free on SuperSearch, MyHeritage's advanced search engine for historical records.

By partnering with Tributes.com, MyHeritage has added 3.5 million obituaries to its search engine. MyHeritage users will enjoy access to additional information about their ancestors, as obituaries help paint a more colorful picture of the life of deceased family members.

Users with family trees on MyHeritage will receive Record Matches – alerts about any gravestones or obituaries (amongst other records) that have been automatically matched to their ancestors.

The addition of these new collections highlights MyHeritage's commitment to increase the quantity and quality of records available for its users. It follows MyHeritage's announcement earlier this month about its strategic partnership with FamilySearch to bring more than 2 billion additional records to MyHeritage.

"We're excited to partner with BillionGraves and Tributes.com to deliver such fascinating and meaningful content to our users", said Russ Wilding, Chief Content Officer at MyHeritage. "This is the type of information that adds color to our family histories and helps even experienced family historians break through brick walls in their research."

"Partnering with MyHeritage is an important milestone in the exponential growth of BillionGraves, solidifying our position as a key international resource for families seeking accurate vital records," said Hudson Gunn, President of BillionGraves.

With over half of the users on the BillionGraves network under the age of 30, BillionGraves' free mobile technology reaches beyond the "traditional" genealogist and caters to a new rising generation of enthusiastic contributors.

"At Tributes.com we believe that every life has a story that deserves to be told and preserved", said Elaine Haney, CEO & President of Tributes.com. "We're delighted to be able to extend access to these records and stories to MyHeritage's huge global audience, helping millions more make meaningful discoveries about their ancestors."

Through one centralized national web destination, with 95 million and growing current and historical death records dating back to the 1930s, Tributes.com has made obituary and online memorial service information easily accessible.

About MyHeritage

About BillionGraves

With more than 5.5 million headstone records created by over 57,000 volunteers in just two years, BillionGraves is the trusted resource for accurate and reliable GPS headstone and burial record data on the web. With users in more than 212 countries, the website is available in 11 different languages. Over 13 thousand records are added each day to the BillionGraves network and four thousand new registered users join every month. BillionGraves' mobile GPS tracking technology on its mobile application perpetuates this progress, bringing a wealth of genealogical information right to your fingertips.

About Tributes.com

Tributes.com is the online source for current local and national obituary news and a supportive community where friends and family can come together during times of loss and grieving to honor the memories of their loved ones with lasting personal tributes. The brand has experienced rapid growth since its launch in the fall of 2008, and is now relied on by thousands of funeral homes and over four million unique consumers each month to publish and locate obituary news. For more information about Tributes.com, visit the website at www.tributes.com.

Online Newspaper Archive Passes the 7 Million Page Mark

The British Newspaper Archive is a partnership project between the British Library and DC Thomson Family History (formally known as brightsolid online publishing). The project has now achieved a significant milestone, as described in this announcement: The British Newspaper Archive (BNA) passed a giant milestone today, as page number 7,000,000 was added to the site at www.britishnewspaperarchive.co.uk.

Since its launch in November 2011, the BNA has been committed to transcribing thousands of pages a day. With a target of 40 million pages by 2021, this 10-year project is the biggest digitization of newspapers to take place in the UK.

Ian Tester, The British Newspaper Archive's Brand Director, said: "We are ecstatic to reach the 7 millionth page. Newspapers are one of the richest resources available to historians, and historical newspapers packed a lot more into a page than modern papers. The Archive holds newspapers that date back to the early 18th Century, and with the 7 million mark passed, we now provide access to comfortably over 100 million stories and articles online – a unique perspective on more than 200 years of historical events."

The 7 millionth page to be added to the online archive was page seven of the 'Burnley Express' for Saturday 30th June 1945. The main headlines of the day include a visit from Winston Churchill, images of servicemen, and an article on the cost of living and pensions.

The website is free to search, with a range of credit and subscription packages available to suit the different needs of researchers who wish to view the paid-for content. Access to the resource is free to users of the British Library's Reading Rooms.

Wisconsin River Pilots

Editor Pilot and Review --Several weeks since there appeared in your paper an article from the pen of Hon. J. C. Clark, in which there was given a partial list of Wisconsin river pilots, and which created no small amount of interest among the old river men along the Wisconsin river valley. With a view of perpetuating the memories of those men who have contributed largely in making the Wisconsin Valley what it is, I have done what I could to complete the list. There are many mentioned who have not piloted out more than one fleet, perhaps, but they are men who have had to run the river for years in order to secure that confidence from their employer, and I consider it but just their names should be en-rolled.

[In order that the list may appear in full in this issue we republish the names from the article of Hon. J.C. Clark.—Ed.]
